Oklahoma Deputy Charged with Manslaughter in Fatal Tulsa Shooting

(Reuters) Oklahoma prosecutors charged a sheriff's reserve deputy with second-degree manslaughter on Monday in the fatal shooting of a black man this month in Tulsa, the most recent in a series of U.S. cases that have raised questions about race relations and policing. Reserve deputy Robert Bates, 73 and white, fatally shot Eric Harris, 44, an African-American, on April 2. Bates thought he was using a Taser instead of his gun, the Tulsa Sheriff's office said of the incident seen in a video released over the weekend. No attorney for Bates was listed on the charge sheet. Legal experts said second-degree manslaughter in Oklahoma can bring between two and four years in prison.

Somali Police Say 8 Die in Attack on Government Office

(AP) Eight people were killed on Tuesday in an attack on a government office complex in the capital, according to police. Police have secured the ministry of higher education office complex, said Capt. Mohamed Hussein, a senior police officer. The attackers stormed the ministry of higher education after a suicide car bomber detonated his vehicle at the gate of the office complex, opening the way for gunmen to enter, said Hussein. The assault on the walled compound which also houses other government ministries is the latest attack by suspected Islamic extremists of al-Shabab who are maintaining a series of attacks in the capital on government targets and the African Union forces who are supporting the government. Smoke could be seen rising over the compound. Security forces rushed to the scene and ambulances ferried wounded victims to hospitals.

Japan Court Bars Restart of Takahama Nuclear Reactors

(BBC News) A Japanese court has blocked the restarting of two nuclear reactors in the western city of Takahama, after local people raised safety concerns. The plant had already obtained approval from the country's nuclear watchdog. But locals had petitioned the court in Fukui prefecture, where Takahama is located, to intervene, saying it would not withstand a strong earthquake. All 48 commercial reactors in Japan remain offline following 2011's Fukushima disaster. Before the accident, caused by a massive quake and tsunami, about 30% of Japan's power was nuclear generated. So far only two reactors - in Kagoshima prefecture in the far south - have been approved for restart. They are expected to become operational later this year, but this move is also being challenged in court.
